Vehicle Operation Liability and Legal Concerns for Law Enforcement

Vehicle operation is one of the most common yet dangerous things an officer does. Unfortunately, police liability resulting from vehicle operation is not uncommon. This class is an awareness training for officers and law enforcement agencies that is designed to increase their understanding of the liability and legal concerns arising out of and around vehicle use in police operation. This is an area where officers can help control their exposure to risk by better understanding the dangers. Specific topics covered include:

- Officer safety, liability awareness, and legal concerns during routine patrol, emergency operation, and pursuits.
- Officer safety, liability awareness, and legal concerns for the three most common police operation impairments: speed, distraction, and sleep deprivation.
- National and State statistics on vehicle operation in law enforcement.
- Relevant national and state case law including: Norton v. Hall.
- Ministerial Activities v. Discretionary Functions and their connection to the Maine Tort Claims Act M.R.S. 14 Chapter 741.
- Understanding M.R.S. 17-A 203; 29-A 2054; and 25 Sec. 2806 as they relate to vehicle liability.
- In class active review of the Maine Chief's Model Policy on: Routine and Emergency Vehicle Operation, Roadblocks, and Pursuits.
